From the Editor's Desk

I was asked to speak in Church last Sunday, and decided to tell a story about my father when he was a boy. Comments afterward reminded me of how far from the frontier we are today. People really thought I'd made the whole thing up! But it's true, and here it is:

My father, Verne Cain, was the oldest of five boys.. They lived in the mountains of Colorado and went to a one-room schoolhouse. (That's the first thing people today can't believe. Imagine eight grades in one room!). The youngest brother, Bobby, misbehaved in some way—he was only six. The teacher held his hands behind his back and marched him up and down the aisle. Outraged, Daddy and the next-oldest brother jumped up, held the teacher's hands behind her back and marched her up and down the aisle.

You won't be surprised to hear that she went to their parents and informed them that neither my dad, nor Bobby, could come to school any more. Being the oldest boy, Daddy was responsible, after the parents, for the younger ones, and he wasn't about to let a six-year-old be sentenced to lifetime illiteracy.

They had an aunt and uncle about 50-60 miles away, across the road from a different school. Daddy set up a tent near them and he and Bobby lived there through the snow and blizzards that characterize winter in the Rocky Mountains. People said to me, "But their parents looked after them!" No, they didn't. Very few cars then and no paved roads. 50-60 miles is a long way on horseback, and it's doubled when you have to get home to take care of the livestock.

They both went to school.

Of course Bobby's kids are my first cousins, and we have often reflected on the lesson they taught us: Education is IMPORTANT!

The West Texas Knapp-in will be at Roaring Springs (near Matador) on January 24 and 25.

PROGRAM INFORMATION

Alex Hunt

George Hunt (1881-1942) was a Kiowa man who attended boarding school, worked as a Baptist minister, and held a place of importance among his tribe. Hunt also worked as a cultural mediator between the Kiowa tribe and Euro-American academics. He was a key informant for a number of well-known scholars who published influential works on the Kiowa tribe, including Wilbur Nye, Mildred Mayhall, and Alice Marriott. Moreover, Hunt was himself a scholar who published several historical essays. The focus in this paper is on the relationship between George Hunt, Charles Goodnight, and J. Evetts Haley. Hunt was involved in visits to Goodnight's ranch and in the production of Goodnight's "Old Texas" film based on a 1916 buffalo hunt. In addition, Hunt corresponded with J. Evetts Haley when Haley was working on Goodnight's biography. Hunt and Haley had different purposes, as Haley was interested primarily in early interactions between Goodnight and the Comanches while Hunt was interested in more recent Kiowa history. Hunt's interactions with Haley demonstrate the degree to which Hunt fought to "shape the narrative" of indigenous history.

Alex Hunt comes from a long line of outdoorsmen and frontier types. He is originally from Alaska, went to school at Colorado State University, and got his PhD in English at the University of Oregon. He has been at WTAMU since 2002 and is the founding director of the Center for the Study of the American West. He publishes on Western American literature and history, often taking an interdisciplinary approach.

COUNTY COURTHOUSES OF TEXAS

POTTER COUNTY

Potter County, cut out from Bexar County, was established in 1887. Amarillo (Spanish for Yellow), named for a nearby creek of that name, became the county seat. In the following year, 1888, the first Potter County Courthouse was built.

Potter was named for Robert Potter (1799-1842). Born in Granville, North Carolina, Potter was one of those men who ran into trouble in the East and decided to come to Texas and start over. He served as one of four delegates from Nagadoches Municipality to the Convention of 1836, where he voted for Independence from Mexico, signed the Texas Declaration of Independence and helped to write the Constitution of the Republic of Texas. He was Secretary of the Texas Navy and Commander of the Port of Galveston.

He was in the Battle of San Jacinto, where he refused to sign the treaty with Santa Anna, and pressed for the Mexican President's execution. Settling into his home at Caddo Lake, with a new wife and two children, he was soon elected Senator. He served from November 1840 until he was killed in March 1842. He was 43 years old, and had been in Texas barely seven years. Read a longer account of his life at https://cemetery.tspb.texas.gov/pub/user_form.asp?pers_id=11

Potter County's first Courthouse, 1887, was a frame building, 20 X 42. The clerk had a tent behind the structure. The following year a masonry edifice was built. It cost $66,000, but it included the jail. It was torn down and the materials were used for the 1896 structure.
